SUGGESTED GUIDELINES

1. Use prompts that are as open-ended as feasible.
2. Use initial prompts that ask for positive, as well as negative information.
3. Move from open to direct questions in incremental steps.
4. Listen to child's responses. Follow up with additional questions to ensure understanding and gather details.
5. Avoid prematurely focusing child's attention too narrowly.
6. Approach the concerning topic from different directions.

PROMPTS TO INITIATE CONVERSATIONS

Groups of questions (prompts) are being presented by topic area. These prompts are not intended to be used as a survey nor will all questions be used in any one conversation. An attempt has been made to rank order the questions from more open to more direct in each topic area. These questions are only to initiate a conversation or exploration of a topic. The child's response to any of the questions should guide the interviewer's comments & further questions.

Remember the sequence of questions. Each question can be asked in each of the question formats.

1. Focused narrative questions (FN)
2. Detail questions (D)
3. Multiple choice questions (MC)
4. Yes/no questions (Y/N)

For example when questioning the child about family:

1. Tell me about your family (FN)
2. Who is in your family? (D)
3. Do you live with your mom, your dad, or someone else? (MC)
4. Do you have a brother? Do you have a sister? (Y/N)

More direct questions can be followed up with a request to "tell me about..."
